The traditional CPA side of Meridian continues to see excellent growth in its tax, accounting and business advisory services. But the fastest-growing segment of the business is its NetSuite technology practice, which helps small and mid-size organizations implement NetSuite's cloud-based business management platform.

Traditionally, ERPs or Enterprise Resource Planning systems were limited to very large companies. In today's technology-driven world, Meridian is helping companies with as few as five employees move from QuickBooks to Oracle's NetSuite, which provides them with a complete solution to manage their end-to-end business operations.

Meridian works with clients to not only improve financial management, but to help their organizations undergo a complete digital transformation—providing a single system to manage all business operations, including: CRM, eCommerce, financials, inventory, purchasing, project management, expense reporting, payroll/HR and business intelligence/analytics.

"By combining our expertise in financial reporting and analytics with a highly knowledgeable team versed in complex technology implementations, we are helping our clients tackle the daunting task of digital transformation," said Amy Goode, managing partner.

Meridian is up for the task of helping organizations manage their financials and digital transformation, but when asked what excites the Meridian team the most, their answer is simple: "The opportunity to help clients grow and realize their full potential." ●
